Touring the World with Geology: Three Places You Must Visit

A. Eugene Fritsche¹

¹California State University, Northridge

Geologists and biologists commonly choose their profession because they are looking for an opportunity to work outdoors in the field. When it comes to world travel, geologists have an edge because basic observable data that can be used in conversations and presentations for fellow travelers are constant worldwide. For a biologist these data change from region to region. Examples of this will be given in the talk.

For those of you who like to travel, there are three places you must visit while you can, not necessarily for their geological attributes, but for their biological uniqueness. Educational and musical tours of Antarctica, the Galapagos Islands, and southern Africa will make up most of the presentation.

A. Eugene Fritsche –BIO

Professor Emeritus of Geology at California State University, Northridge (CSUN), where before retirement he taught for 37 years. Married to Sue, has two grown children, and three grandchildren. Enjoys camping, hiking, travel, and photography. Recipient of Honorary Membership in the Pacific Section, AAPG; Honorary Membership and a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Pacific Section, SEPM; Distinguished Teaching Awards from CSUN and the Pacific Section, AAPG; and the Grover E. Murray Memorial Distinguished Educator Award from the national AAPG.
